Design Response: The TATA Management Training Center was originally to be an institute to train about 50 trainees at a time. There was to be a building attached and sensitive to the original Wittet design. Initially a dining room was added, followed by a library.

A significant renovation was done to the bungalow from the interior. Thereafter a series of bungalows designed as trainee guest quarters were designed to sit in the landscape.

Today the institute is used for a variety of different purposes and has seen many a luminary walk its hallowed halls.
